

School counselors more involved than ever in students' lives

Written by Elizabeth Barrett
Thursday, 10 February 2011 14:49 -

Wiggins, Glodowski of GHS discuss roles at Stakeholders meeting.

Gone are the days when students seek out counselors for ACT test or scholarship applications.

These days guidance counselors at Gothenburg Public Schools see kids for a myriad of reasons such as dealing with the breakup of a relationship or thoughts of suicide to dating violence and much more.

“We are there as advocates for the students,” said high school counselor Jerry Wiggins.

Interestingly, Wiggins said they have the most contact with students dealing with social issues around social events—like homecoming, coronation and prom—and the holidays.

Students with academic concerns often visit counselors at the beginning and end of the school year and when scholarships are due.

Wiggins and Pam Glodowski, who counsels students grades four through eight, spoke to 29 Stakeholders at a noon meeting Feb. 2 at Gothenburg Public Library.

Stakeholders are community members who are invited to meetings on different educational topics. They are then asked to share what they learn with at least three other people.

School counselors more involved than ever in students' lives

Written by Elizabeth Barrett
Thursday, 10 February 2011 14:49 -

Over the past few years, school counselors have become more involved in students' lives. Sometimes they are the only staff member who can help a student with a problem. They are also the ones who can help a student who is struggling in school. They are the ones who can help a student who is having trouble with their family. They are the ones who can help a student who is having trouble with their friends. They are the ones who can help a student who is having trouble with their self. They are the ones who can help a student who is having trouble with their future. They are the ones who can help a student who is having trouble with their life.