Watch for it on YouTube.

Students dancing with golf clubs, spinning in Spanish sombreros, dashing through hallways and clapping to the school song are a sampling of a school video shot last Friday by the media productions class.

The message?

That there's a place for every person at Gothenburg High School and activities they can be involved in, according to Dan Jensen, who teaches the class.

Junior and senior high students dismissed early that day for four takes of filming that began in the media center, wove up and downstairs through hallways, a school gym and cafeteria before ending on the football field where the band formed the letter GHS and played the Swede fight song.

"We thought homecoming would be the best time to film because of how hyped up everyone would be," said senior Josh Clark who videotaped students. "It was a constant roar as I went by with everyone cheering and singing."

Senior MacKenzie Brand returned home with the idea from a workshop.

When the students were asked to perform a song, they sang "I'm a Rebel" by the band The Black Eyed Peas. The students were very energetic and had a lot of fun during the video shoot.
